

ERIN MILLIKEN: LITTLE WONDERS

Saturday, June 28, 2014 to Saturday, August 9, 2014

Erin Milliken's exhibition little wonders is a collection of mixed media pieces that play upon ideas of vulnerability, temporality, communication, connection, wonder and hope. Milliken uses the motif of rabbits as a means of exploring complex societal juxtapositions of vulnerability and destruction. Despite being cruelly treated as disposable, rabbits are resourceful in their speed and cunning and are known for their prolific reproductive abilities. These creatures have a long and storied natural and cultural history, appearing in many mythologies as trickster figures. Above all, they are survivors.

Erin Milliken lives in Kingston, Ontario. Although her practice is primarily in drawing, her latest artistic endeavors touch upon sculpture and installation work. Erin has studied at a variety of institutions, including the Ottawa School of Art, the New York State College of Art and Design at Alfred University, and Southern Methodist University. She is a founding member of the Agitated Plover Salon artists' collective.
